

OPEN FIELDS AND WATERS (OFW) SMALL GRAIN STUBBLE ACCESS PROGRAM

Wheat and milo stubble left tall after harvest provides habitat for pheasants, quail and other wildlife from late summer through the winter and excellent hunting opportunities throughout the hunting season. Nebraska Game and Parks Commission biologists work with private landowners and agricultural producers to improve wildlife habitat and make many of these lands available for public, walk-in hunting. Most OFW Small Grain Stubble sites occur in the western portions of the state where small grains are more prevalent (see map below).

WHERE TO FIND STUBBLE SITES

Due to the timing of wheat and milo harvest, tall stubble fields are not able to be included in the printed version of the Public Access Atlas. Most of these properties are incorporated into this printed guide but the full listing of OFW Small Grain Stubble sites and other lands open to public access can be found online by visiting OutdoorNebraska.org/PublicAccessAtlas. Hunters are reminded that the online versions of the atlas (digital and interactive) provide the most up-to-date information as they are updated throughout the season. OFW Small Grain Stubble sites (illustrated in light purple) consist of tall wheat or milo stubble fields, and many include unfarmable pockets that contain dense cover. Hunters are encouraged to seek these areas out and take advantage of the great opportunities they provide.

THE BERGGREN PLAN FOR PHEASANTS

The Nebraska Game and Parks Commission recently completed a comprehensive, five-year plan aimed at improving the pheasant hunting experience in Nebraska. The Berggren Plan will consider all manageable aspects of the pheasant hunting experience, with habitat and access as cornerstone activities.
